Natural Bridge Historical Society August 24th Meeting.

We met 10:00 am at the Rackstraw House Saturday morning. The State Park Service was well represented as well as the U.D.C., however I was the only one that showed up that represented the S.C.V. The meeting went on for about 2 hours. Due to time and space I will only highlight the main points.

First off, the perimeter fencing on the new property is about 98% complete.

The park has received a great increase in park funding that will be used to improve park structures that include a new roof for the Rakestraw house and at least one park residence.

Most of the said funding will be used to hire a new park employee (OPS)

In the works: there should be a $5:00 entry fee for the 2020 reenactment by the way of a ticket that will be checked/punched at the gate. Said ticket will be two sided with the schedule of events on the back side.

A signed architectural drawing has been submitted to the park service in order to get the Rakestraw house ADA compatible.

The state park service emblem has changed; they are in the process of switching out decals and patches on uniforms. This is an unfunded mandate so each park must come up with the money to remove and replace decals and patches through their own separate park budgets.

The state park service has been put in charge of running the Jack Bluff Dam Aka Lake Talquin Dam. C.O.T. is “loaning” two employees to show them the ins and outs of running the dam. I asked about the condition of the structure and got an “excellent condition” for the answer.

Robert Hamilton Crockett.

2-15-1832 Parris, Tennessee / 2-18-1902 Stuttgart, Arkansas.

Robert Hamilton Crockett son of John Wesley and Marth Turner Hamilton. and grandson of legend David Crockett A.K.A. Davie Crockett of Alamo Fame. He received his formal education at the Kentucky Military Institute. After his education he moved to Memphis and became editor of the Memphis Eagle. He was married to Sallie F. Lewis in Memphis in 1852, was admitted to the Tennessee bar in 1853 and was remarried to Marry B. Lewis (Sister To First Wife) in Memphis in 1855 also in 1855 he migrated to Arkansas and settled near Crockett's Bluff on the White River and remained there till 1882 when he moved to Dewitt Arkansas, He spent his last time on Earth in Stuttgart Arkansas (Duck Hunting Capital Of The World!) where he served as the first mayor of the town.

GEN. ROBERT H. CROCKETT

(Grandson of David Crockett, a native of Paris, now of Stuttgart, Ark., and his little great-granddaughter).

During the war he originally enlisted in Company H (The Crockett Rifles) 1st Arkansas with the rank of Captain. He then was enlisted in 18th Arkansas with the rank of Major on 4-2-1862. He was then promoted to the rank of Lieut. Colonel around 9-1-1862 and was promoted again a short time later to Colonel on 10-4-1862. His final promotion was that of Provost Marshal to Washington, Arkansas in 1865.

After the war he went back to practicing law and served as an Arkansas state senator from 1885-1888. In 1902 the Senate for the Commonwealth of Kentucky expressed her feelings on the passing of Colonel Robert Hamilton Crockett.

Resolved, That Kentucky, by her assembled Senate, hereby expresses to the world, especially her sister commonwealth of Arkansas, and particularly to the bereaved widow and two children of the illustrious dead, her great and sincere sorrow and recognition of irreparable loss in the death of Note: General is probably an honorary title. I find no record of Robert with the rank of General during the war.

Resolved, that as a Commonwealth she recognizes from history that as a soldier, statesman and man of letter, has fallen asleep, and from the legion of friends and relatives, citizens of this Commonwealth, it is made known to her that an ideal husband and father whose home was to him a sacred temple, and who, in the thronedom of his heart sate his devoted wife and two children and their progeny only one seat below that which in loving faith he gave the Christ; and in that home a great State who loved his history would hereby leave memoriam.

Resolved, Kentucky recognized the illustrious dead as a patriot and a soldier, whose sword was never drawn but for conscience's sake, and never sheathed in dishonor; a statesman devoted to the principles upon which the republic was founded; graciously unobtrusive, yet erudite, seeking the public weal, self was lost to sight; a poet, he wielded a sweet and versatile pen that gave his beloved Southland some of her most delightful and inspiring lines; with a heart and mind so filled with love of forests, streams, music, children, flowers and home that mercenary money getting was a stranger; a genius, in whom all the finest feelings predominated, he cast sunshine and love along the whole way and gave joy to the countless hearts that will love him always.

Resolved, That Kentucky, who loved him and whom he loved, begs to clasp hands with her sweet sister, Arkansas, at the grave of her illustrious son, mingle her tears and leave a wreath.

Resolved, That the clerk of the Senate is directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Secretary of State of Arkansas.

GEN. STEPHEN DILL LEE'S ADDRESS AT NEW ORLEANS

April 25, 1906

When the greetings and welcomes of the hospitable New Orleans authorities had been expressed at the opening of the last great U. C. V. Reunion in New Orleans, Gen. Stephen D. Lee, upon taking the chair as presiding officer, said:

“The United Confederate Veterans are again met in the city of their origin. We are once more the guests of those patriotic and energetic men, into whose labors we have entered and to whom the thanks of all surviving Confederates are due. Again and again we have returned to taste of the inexhaustible bounty of your hospitality, to be refreshed by the patriotism and enthusiasm of this generous and beautiful city.

The flags of France and of Spain, of the Union and of the Confederacy have floated over the soil upon which we stand, but always over brave men and lovely women, loyal to the best they knew, faithful alike to the living and to the dead, a civilization transplanted like a rare flower of France, blossoming in the New World and bearing exquisite fruit. The Confederate cannot forget the city of the gallant and accomplished Beauregard, the brave and unfortunate Hood, the city where Jefferson Davis loved to walk, and which honored him in his death with an outpouring of loyalty and grief which did honor to the Southern heart. Here is Metairie, where Albert Sidney Johnston speaks in imperishable bronze, and the monument to the Army of Northern Virginia rises, tall and white, like the soul of its great chieftain.

We love you, Louisiana, where the stern blood of the Anglo Saxon has been touched with the grace and the genius of France. Here amid the very chivalry of patriotism there is welcome for all who prize noble and generous deeds and most of all a welcome for him who loved his country best and bore her cross of pain ... the Confederate soldier. We who grieved for this unhappy city in the hour of its capture and humiliation rejoice in its pride today standing second only to New York among American ports of export, your mighty river filled with the ships of all nations; your historic streets alive with the commerce of the world. We behold with satisfaction great railroad systems struggling to enter your gates and the merchants of a thousand cities listening for the murmurs of your markets. We wait the coming of the day when the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific shall mingle together, and on both alike shall float the commerce of this imperial city, when the sons of those who struggled in vain for Southern supremacy shall here behold a peaceful victory more magnificent than those of their great armies, a commercial supremacy more splendid than their noblest visions, and here beside the Father of Waters shall be realized the capital of their dreams.

We have lost dear friends and comrades since we met together, none more beloved and more honored than the soldier who was recently laid to rest at Arlington. Joe Wheeler won his spurs by true and honorable service. He was a superb cavalry leader, and earned on many a hard-fought field the right to lead where brave men follow. When the heart of our common country yearned to express to her Confederate sons that their welcome home was complete, to Wheeler it was given to show on our behalf that every star on the flag was now dear to us, and that we were ready to follow it to the very "Isles of the Sea." It was Southern hands that set star after star in that blue field of glory, and if any more stars are ever planted there; it will be strange if Southerners are not found assisting at the service.

Comrades, there is one thing committed to our care as a peculiar trust ... the memory of the Confederate soldier. So far as lies in our power, we have striven that history may not lack the evidence of his purity of motive, his fortitude, his heroism. I for one do not fear that, justice, however long delayed, will not ultimately be done to one of the grandest bodies of men who ever battled for independence or, triumphing over defeat, bound up the bleeding wounds of their country.

There are three things peculiarly left for our concern. One of these is the erection of public monuments to our Confederate dead, not only to our leaders, but, above all, to those private soldiers who made our leaders immortal. We must not over task posterity by expecting those who come after us to build monuments to heroes whom their own generations were unwilling to commemorate. The South has reached a position of material prosperity which justifies both State and private beneficence to honor the faithful dead.

In all human lot there has nothing better been found for man than to die for his country. If there be any virtue, if there be any praise, this fate is to be preferred above all others. We feel it is well with those who have thus fulfilled the highest of all trusts, the duty of a citizen to his native land, and whatever may have been their private faults, their public service on the field of battle has rightly given them a place with the immortals. Theirs was the martyr's devotion without the martyr's hope. Their generation and their country imposed upon them this high service. They fulfilled it without flinching. They felt that the issue of the battle was with God; the issue of their duty was with themselves. . . .

I urge monuments to the Confederate soldier first for the sake of the dead, but most for the sake of the living, that in this busy industrial age these stones to the Confederate soldier may stand like great interrogation marks to the soul of each beholder.

Let us pass the remainder of our day's ill, suchwise that nothing we shall do will bring shame and, shared with them the glory of their sufferings, the fame of their victories, the tragedy of their regret that we also were Confederate soldiers. As we overthrow, and that sympathy of their countrymen which covered the defeated as with a mantle of imperishable love, let us also share as best we may their simplicity of heart, their scorn of all ignoble actions, their dignity of soul, that our descendants may say of us with swelling hearts: "He also followed Johnston, he also fought with Lee." To this day there stands carved upon the graves of our English ancestors the symbol of the Crusaders. Their names are forgotten, but the cross remains. So let it be with the Confederate soldier! . . .

And is there any message we would give to the States we loved and on whose behalf we drew our swords more than a generation ago? As we have sorrowed over your devotion, we now rejoice in your prosperity. We chose for you the fortune of war rather than a shameful peace. We battled for your principles rather than yield them, not to conviction but to force. With breaking hearts we bowed beneath the stroke of fate. We chose the only course worthy of Americans. Better defeat than dishonor, better the long, bitter story of reconstruction than tame surrender of the convictions we received from our fathers, the principles which we cherished as the basis of our liberties. We leave our motives to the judgment of posterity. In the choice we made we followed the dictates of conscience and the voice of honor. We sacrificed all that men hold dear for the land of our birth, and, while we have no fear that history will record our deeds with shame, we do not regard even the verdict of posterity as the equivalent of a clear conscience, nor ought we to have been false to our convictions even to win the eternal praises of mankind. If our children shall praise us, it is well, if our own hearts tell us we have fulfilled our duty, it is better.

Last of all; let us remember our less prosperous comrades. If we can perhaps sweeten the last years of those old men, bring back, maybe, the light of other days in their fading eyes, awake in their hearts the great memories, they will bless us in receiving more than we in giving. Many of the States whom they so nobly served are gathering them in soldiers' homes, institutions which combine the beauty of charity with the grace of gratitude. But there are many other old veterans who will never be brought within such hospitable walls and who are left to our personal charge for such sympathy and assistance as are honorable alike to them and to us. Let each Camp continue its special care for this beneficent labor, and see to it that true comradeship shall cease only when all of us have passed beyond human power to relieve."

"To you, mothers of the Memorial Association, will be given the service of commemorating the soldier's virtues in the hearts of those who come after us by the story of the illustrious dead, of comforting the hearts of those who mourn our lost heroes with such ministrations as bespeak the sympathy of the patriot and the loving kindness of those who are familiar with the same sorrow."

"To you, Sons of Confederate Veterans, we will commit the vindication of the cause for which we fought. To your strength will be given the defense of the Confederate soldier's good name, the guardianship of his history, the emulation of his virtues, the perpetuation of those principles which he loved and which you love also, and those ideals which made him glorious and which you also cherish. Are you also ready to die for your country? Is your life worthy to be remembered along with theirs? Do you choose for yourself this greatness of soul?"

"Not in the clamor of the crowded street,
Not in the shouts and plaudits of the throng,
But in ourselves, are triumph and defeat."

"To you, Daughters of the Confederacy will be given the loving service of remembering the Confederate dead and of ministering to the living who were dear to him and are in need of your help and tenderness. Worthy daughters you shall be of the immortal women, your mothers, who gave to womanhood a new perfection of heroism and a more divine expression of sacrifice and devotion.”

“To you, brave people of the South, to you, true hearted Americans everywhere, to you, world conquering race from which we sprung; To all men everywhere who prize in man the manliest deeds, who love in man the love of country, who praise fidelity and courage, who honor self-sacrifice and noble devotion, will be given an incomparable inheritance, the memory of our prince of men ... the Confederate soldier.”

At the conclusion of General Lee's address the bright and beautiful young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Madison presented him an exquisite group of flowers.
